OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

In its June meeting, the Fed hiked anew its benchmark rate to 1.25%. This is the second time the Fed raised its Fed funds rate and the fourth time since it started the current tightening cycle.

Despite these moves by the Fed, the bond market remained generally unmoved. Interestingly, the yield of the 10-year Treasury bonds was even slightly lower in June compared to its May closing except for the last few trading days when yields inched higher.

As expected, U.S. dollar denominated Republic of the Philippines (ROP) bonds mirrored the movements of U.S. Treasuries. Meanwhile, rates being offered by local and foreign banks on U.S. dollar time deposit placement have remained flat due to ample liquidity.
