OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

Bond yields steadily climbed in December on the back of higher inflation expectation next year. Investors believe that this development should prompt the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas (BSP) to hike rates, at least, twice next year. Aside from higher inflation, the BSP may have to reckon with the narrowing interest rate differential between the Philippine peso (PHP) and the U.S. Dollar (USD). A narrower differential weakens the PHP which results to more expensive imported goods like petroleum products. This is what the BSP is concerned of.

Given a rising interest rate environment, we will continue to be defensive in our portfolio exposure.
