OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

June was another difficult month for equities as the market shed another 4% to end the month at 7,194. Foreign portfolio funds remained net sellers unloading USD253 million worth of stocks during the period, the 5th straight month of net outflows. June was also the month when the 7,500 support level, which held for two months, was breached. The breakdown was swift pushing the index below 7,000 temporarily. On a year-to-date basis, a total of USD1.2 billion have already left the local bourse, slightly more than what entered the market in 2017.

Even while stocks have reached oversold position, investors remained reluctant to increase their position. Concern over the peso weakness will likely keep foreign investors away from our market for a while. In the meantime, uncertainties over inflation, interest rates, and the peso will keep investors cautious and defensive.
